

Antigen testing for COVID-19 – privacy information

Within the next few days, weeks and months, you may be invited to undertake a COVID-19 priority antigen test because you or someone in your household is a key worker and is currently following the government's guidelines on self-isolation.

The test will confirm whether you currently have COVID-19. The result of the test will enable you or the key worker(s) in your household to know whether to continue to self-isolate or whether it is safe to return to work.

If you do decide to take a test, we will need to collect some information about you in order to be able to conduct the test, communicate the result and use for public health purposes.

At the moment we are conducting the corresponding privacy assessments. We will shortly update this section once we have further details.]
