

Tuesday, 24 January 2023

Health Protection

These FAQs have been developed to provide information and advice on Group A Streptococcus and its public health management, including in educational settings, and are aimed at healthcare professionals and those working in education and early years settings.

They should be read in conjunction with:

- UK guidelines for the management of contacts of invasive group A streptococcus (iGAS) infection in community and education settings
- Guidelines for the public health management of scarlet fever outbreaks in schools, nurseries and other childcare settings

Frequently Asked Questions

General information

- What is Group A Streptococcus (GAS)?
- How is GAS spread?
- What is scarlet fever?
- How is a streptococcal throat infection distinguished from a sore throat?
- What is the role of GAS Rapid Diagnostics?
- What is the treatment for GAS infection?

Invasive Group A Streptococcus (iGAS)

- What is Invasive Group A Streptococcus (iGAS)?
- How common is iGAS?

These FAQs have been developed to provide information and advice on Group A Streptococcus and its public health management, and are aimed at healthcare professionals and those working in education and early years settings.

Details

Format

13 pages, A4, PDF only

Target group

Healthcare professionals and those working in education and early years settings

Downloads

Attachment

Size

Group A Streptococcus in children \(including scarlet fever and invasive Group A Streptococcus\)

739.97
KB

Tags

- infection prevention and control

Print